A graphic novel relates the life experiences, from birth to beginning boarding school, of a Muslim boy growing up on a rubber plantation in rural Malaysia in the 1950s that include mischief-making, fishing trips, religious study, and work on his family's rubber plantation.

A fascinating ethnographic study of the cultural politics of urban redevelopment in Kampung Serani, one Penang community, in the 1990s. Through interviews, newspaper reports, and other records, Goh considers changing notions of culture, ethnic identity, and urban space.

The residents of Kampung Naga occupy a traditional area called Kampung Naga. As part of Sundanese society, residents of Kampung Naga have enriched Sundanese culture, where the principles inherited from their ancestors turned out to have wisdom in the local knowledge system, something that has been ruled out by modern humans. Various local knowledge systems that are still maintained include the alignment of relations with nature and the environment. Written in a popular journalistic language style and complemented by a series of exclusive photographs of the writer's shots, this book has managed to record the system of values, traditions and art that has been maintained by the Kampung Naga community in the face of the swift currents of modernization and globalization.

In Behind the Postcolonial Abidin Kusno shows how colonial representations have been revived and rearticulated in postcolonial Indonesia. The book shows how architecture and urban space can be seen, both historically and theoretically, as representations of political and cultural tendencies that characterize an emerging as well as a declining social order. It addresses the complex interactions between public memories of the present and past, between images of global urban cultures and the concrete historical meanings of the local. It shows how one might write a political history of postcolonial architecture and urban space that recognizes the political cultures of the present without neglecting the importance of the colonial past. In the process, it poses serious questions for the analysis and understanding of postcolonial states.
